Euthanasia, also known as mercy killing or assisted suicide, refers to the act of intentionally ending one's life with the consent of oneself or others. The term "इच्छा-मृत्यु" (ichchha mrityu) in Hindi can be translated to euthanasia. In New Zealand, a bill was passed that legalized voluntary euthanasia, allowing individuals to choose when and how they want to end their life with the help of medical professionals. However, this practice is not without controversy and raises ethical concerns about the morality of ending one's life. The use of ichchha mrityu can be found in various contexts, such as: * In ancient India, the term "इच्छा-मृत्यु" was used to describe a form of destruction or annihilation. * In modern times, it refers to assisted suicide or euthanasia, where individuals choose to end their life with the assistance of medical professionals. * In some countries, active euthanasia is illegal and can lead to prosecution for failure to render aid in an emergency. The concept of ichchha mrityu has been discussed in various cultures and societies, including ancient Greece and Rome, where it was considered a form of "natural death" or "mercy killing". In recent years, there have been debates about the morality and ethics of euthanasia, with some arguing that it is a human right to choose when and how one wants to end their life. Others argue that it is morally equivalent to assisted suicide. The availability of ichchha mrityu has also raised concerns about animal welfare, as some countries have made it easier for veterinarians to administer euthanasia to animals. The passage discusses various forms of self-imposed mortality, including taking pills, using plastic exit bags or CO generators, and "slow euthanasia". One individual, Anna, reportedly said she was told by Maya that the skull was used to will death. The text also references the Bible, mentioning how Jesus maintained his integrity even in the face of opposition and torture. The passage highlights a Supreme Court decision on passive euthanasia, where teachers are seeking permission for mercy killing. It also shares stories of people who have died under similar circumstances, such as a woman who set herself on fire demanding justice, or Robert Pius, who is serving a life sentence and has asked the government to grant him death. The text also raises questions about the right to die, citing examples of individuals who are seeking assisted deaths in Switzerland. It concludes by stating that there is currently no law governing euthanasia in India. Note: The passage appears to be a mix of religious and philosophical discussions on mortality, as well as references to real-life events and legal decisions on euthanasia. The family of one of the convicts in the Rajiv Gandhi assassination case has demanded that he be given the death penalty. Robert Pious, a convicted person in the case, is seeking euthanasia, a request that so far remains unconsidered by lawmakers at this stage.
