

I'm not a bot

Alongside Kendrick Lamar, Jay Rock, and the rest of the Top Dawg Entertainment crew, Schoolboy Q has become one of the definitive voices of 2010s rap. A descendant of gangsta tradition, he can be rough (Break the Bank), he can be funny (There He Go), and he can be bracingly introspective (Blessed). But like Snoop Dogg before him, the underlying note in Q's music is a kind of hard-won fun, the resilience of someone who knows darkness but keeps swaggering toward the light. Many nights I cry, he told Apple Music in 2019. You know what I'm saying? That's why I try to stay away from sad music at this point in my life. Like, even listening to sad music. I'm trying to smile, bro. Carefree, no. But that doesn't mean he can't live. Born Quincy Matthew Hanley in 1986, on a military base in Wiesbaden, Germany, Q grew up in South Central LA, connecting with Top Dawg and forming the Black Hippy collective with Kendrick Lamar, Jay Rock, and Ab-Soul in the late 2000s. Though the feel was thoroughly West Coast, the influences skewed East: 50 Cent, Biggie, Nas. And while he never took a turn for the self-consciously serious (Q was serious from the beginning), he's grown mellower and more self-assured with time, an avid golfer and proud dad who still knows how to turn up. After a stream of critically acclaimed albums, Q took a five-year hiatus. In 2024, he returned with BLUE LIPS, an LP that was as dynamic as it was introspective. On tracks like Blueslides, he mourns the death of his friend Mac Miller. On Thank god 4 me, he takes a moment to reflect on loyalty, respect, and self-gratitude, framing themes of mortality with the spirit of a repentant gangster at peace with life as he knows it. Listening to DMX and The Ruff Ryders as a kid helped me understand lyrics and how to tell story's with your words. What are your top 3 all-time favorite albums on AppleMusic, and why? Why did you choose these three albums in particular? Yung Q, The Quesada LP This Album was something I wrote that had so much meaning to me, stories of my life and also some crazy ones too but for the majority this album means the world to me. I hope all my fans love this album as much as I do. Find a song of yours on AppleMusic that you love and tell us what makes it special. Tell us why you chose this song. Aftermath This song was one of the realest songs I ever wrote. Love the beat and the meaning behind it. What's one of the most memorable moments in your career so far? Performing alongside Kirko Bangz for our single Yo GF Too which has went Gold. We filmed a music video as well that night for the song, we had no idea what a massive success the record would be. The Quesada LP 2 Is there anything left on your bucket list as an artist or band? To create more music for all the fans across the world and make my label God Family Cash #GFCGang be a global success. Rapper XXXTENTACION born Jahseh Onfroy mounted his career with a stream of self-released singles and mixtapes before catapulting into the mainstream in 2017 with 17 and the chart-topping ?, the latter released months before his death. The South Florida natives volatile approach made him one of the leading figures in so-called SoundCloud rap, combining the hollowed-out sound of trap with the vulnerability of emo and folk, exploring depression and self-loathing with a frankness almost unheard of in rap (or any other genre, for that matter). At his most captivating (Look At Me!, SAD!) Onfroy seemed to swing between numbness and violence, between feeling everything and feeling nothing at all an uneasy dichotomy that resonated especially with younger fans desperate for an emotional outlet. A starkly controversial figure (? was recorded on house arrest while he awaited trial for aggravated battery of a pregnant woman), Onfroy also seemed to speak from experience, a boundary-blurring artist who, for better and worse, lived his art: He was shot and killed in June 2018, at the age of 20.
